REVIEW OF THE Affairs of FRANCE:

Purg'd from the Errors and Partiality of New-Writers and Petty-Statesmen, of all Sides.

Saturday, January 6. 1705.

I Am very Unhappy, in that, while I am Entering this Dark Gulph of General Negoce, this hidden Mystery, this half-known thing call'd Trade, I speak to the Understanding's but of a very few.

Not that I shall undertake to lay, what sort of People do, or do not understand it; for no Man loves to be told he does not understand a Thing, almost every Man we Converse with, now Talks of, The Balance of Trade; and makes no more of it, than of a common pair of Scale and Weights.

But the Misfortune is, when we come to talk of Foreign Exchanges, Negotiating Bills, Remitting and Drawing, and the Infinite Varieties, Niceties, and Originals of that Mystery call'd Exchange; those very Gentlemen, that pretend most to it, understand but little of it.

To know the exact Courses of Exchange, the Different Rates of every Exchange in Europe, and the Aspect it has to a Sterling Original; how to remit Money to Lois, and draw it Home to Gain; to remit with Gain; and by after Negotiating and Remitting it from Place to Place, bring it Home again without Loss. — These are Things, I believe, very few Men in England, Our Commissioners of Trade always Excepted, can give an Exact Scheme of: Nay, those very Authors who have wrote on these Heads, have done little more than lead their Readers into the Wood, and left them to come out, as Wise as they went in.

I am far from thinking my self Capable to attempt the Explaining, what so many other Heads have to no purpose Employ'd themselves about.

But I note this, to lead the Reader into the following Observation, as to Correspondence with France; by which it will appear, that the French, by the Inexplicable Riddle of Foreign Exchanges, may at any time borrow a Hundred thousand Pounds on the Exchange of London; to serve an Extraordinary Emergency; and yet neither the Merchant that pays it, know for whose Use he parts with the Money, nor the Government, if they had Notice of it, be able to prevent it.

For Example:

Suppose his most Christian Majesty, to have an Extraordinary Occasion to supply his Army in Italy with Ammunition, or to furnish his Commissaries there with Bread, or other Provisions, to the Value of 100000 l. Sterling.

— Suppose him, tho' that seldom happens, not to have ready Money to remit; but having a Trusty Agent at Genoa, Monieur Pons Chat train, orders him to furnish on his Credit, and Draw for the Money on A. B. at Hamburg, C. D. at Amsterdam, E. F. at Antwerp, G. H. at Lisbon, and the like, in smaller Sums; to these several Persons Monsieur Writes to accept the Bills, and to Draw for Payment upon any Merchants they have Credit with at London; ordering those Merchants to Draw again for their Reimburse upon such or such, at the like differing Ports; and to these again he sends Orders to Draw upon Seignior P. O. at Venice, or Leghorn.

Tis true, that all these Bills will stand charged with Commissions to the several Merchants Drawing and Redrawing, and with the Casual Difference of the Exchange, which may, or may not be Great, as Exchanges may run.

But 'tis also true, the King of France has,

1. His Emergent Occasion serv'd, for which 'tis worth his while to allow the Difference.

2. All the Loss per Exchange, may, as it may happen, come far within the Extravagant Intrefts of 14 to 17 per Cent. which he often pays to his own Subjects, for the advancing of Money on his Funds at Home.

At last his Bills come back to Genoa, the Merchant has Bills sent him to Pay, or Credit on the Bank of Lions, or a hundred ways, to answer his Credit; and as he gains Money by it, so he is always able to supply on the like Occasion.

Thus the Exchange of London pays the Money, and the English Merchant, for the mean Consideration of half per Cent. supplies the Enemy, and knows nothing of the Matter.

How vain a Thing then is it, to talk of Prohibiting Commerce with France, in order to prevent Supplies! The Meaning may be honest, but 'tis plain, the Effect is a Million per Annum to the Nations Loss.

Having therefore once but prov'd, that our Trade to France, if open, would be to our Gain, I would be glad to have any Man tell me, Why it should be stop'd? If it be to our Gain, it must be to their Loss; and if we are, as by the Declaration o' War, by all means to annoy them both by Sea and Land, let us Trade with them. We shall beggar them by it, and all Men will allow that's as quick a Way of Beating them, as to Fight them.

We ought to Trade with every Nation we can Bubble; I wish we Traded with none that Bubble us. We us'd to abuse the Dutch; for that when they had Wars with the Algerines, they would sell them Ammunition and Naval Stores; let any Man but Enquire into that Case, and the Reason of this will appear, The Algerines might have it any where else for their Money; and the Dutch, that lost by the War, had as much reason to get by the Powder and Shot, as any Body; and I cannot but agree, they were in the Right of it, by the same Rule as I hinted of our Lead to France, in Review, N. 83.

Since thence 'tis plain, that were we now at Peace with France, we might Trade with them to our Advantage; they may prohibit Trade with us, and they have a great deal of reason for it; but it remains a most entire Mystery to all the World, why we should Prohibit Trade with them.

I cannot help saying, it reflects upon our Politicks, and charges the Managers of Affairs, with not at all understanding the Interest of this Nation, or not knowing when Trade run for or against the General Advantage.

And what shall we now say, to our being so earnest to Prohibit all Communication with France by Letters? Did our Statesmen think that would prevent General Intelligence? Did they think Remitting and Drawing of Money could be stop'd by it? — Who would laugh at those Wise Men, that would make a Hedge about the Cookoo, and not turn about, and acknowledge this Ridiculous Piece of State-banter had less Sence by half in it?

Why did they not Write to the Great Turk, that he should prevent any Correspondence between Marseilles and Constantinople? And send Word to the Great Duke of Tuscany, he should Remit no Money to Lions? Why did they not agree to lay an Embargo on the Genoese, and stop the Post to Geneva? Preposterous Madnes! Empty Ignorant State-Mountebanks! that to put a Face upon their Conduct, busie themselves in that they don't understand; Ruine the Nations Trade, and then blame the Dutch, that they won't be as Great Fools as their Neighbours!

I could run this on to some Diverting Particulars, and please the Reader with hearing the Wise Reasons, some who think themselves Great Men, give for a Prohibition of Trade; but the Sence of it is so small, and would go so near to Drawing the Picture of their Persons, that I forbear.

One Great Reason for their blaming the Dutch is this — "They are a Parcel of En-
" croaching Devils; they carry on an Open Trade.

" Trade now, and Get Money by the War :
 " —— Let us make them stop the Trade,
 " or send over no more Forces to help them ; a
 " Parcel of Dutch Sons of W——s, and the " like. .

If you vex me, I'll eat no dinner, said I, when I was a Little Boy, till my Mother taught me to be Wiser, by letting me stay till I was a Hungry: The Comparison's mean enough, but nothing can be so Contemptible, to represent this Ridiculous Notion. — You'll send no more Forces over; that is, You'll be undone to Vex the Dutch: Do we send over our Troops to help them, or defend our selves, and prevent the General Ruine ?

But then for the Occasion, they have an Open Trade with France; Ay, and the Wiser they; and so should we too, if our Eyes were not, with Solomon's Fool, in the Ends of the Earth; but woe be to him that pretends to show a Nation their Folly, or to Teach this Opinion-wise Generation, any thing for their real Advantage.

ADVICE from the Scandal. C L U B.

NOW must our Author come before his own Society, to satisfy the following Gentleman's Curiosity.

SIR,

In one of your late Reviews (the Number I've [forgot] you are very Angry with some Gentle- men who enraged upon a Mistake in one of your Papers, and wondered they should Quarrel as Words without regard to Substantialis. Now, Sir, with Submission, your Criticism upon the Suffolk Ad- dress, is no Substantialis.

In the Title of your Review, I find these words, [Purg'd from the Errors and Partiality of Petty Statesmen.]

Query. Whether those Words do not necessarily Imply, that you are a Grand Statesman; which is a Character too great for any Man to give himself, without Vanity?

In your last Review you Quote your self; which I take to be contrary to the Rules of Argument, as well as the Rules of Authors; for the End of Quo- tation is either to support an Author's Opinion, by that of some Wise and Learned Person; or to prove what an Author says, by Instances out of some Ambentick Writers.

Query. Whether an Author by Quoting himself, strengthens his Argument, or proves anything, but that he has a great Conceit of himself?

Query. Whether the Practice of that which you Condemn in others, as in the Suffolk Address, and Self-conceit, as in your Title and Quotations, are not within the Province of Scandal; and if you ought not to be called before your own Society?

Decemb. 28. Your humble Servant,

C. D.

The Charge here fairly sum'd up, implies,
 1. The Criticism upon the Suffolk Address, is not a Substantial.

2. Our Title saying Petty-Statesmen, must Imply the Author is a Grand-Statesman.

3. The Author Quoting himself, argues Conceit of himself, and Strengthens no Argument.

To the first, The Author insisted, that the Criticism on the Suffolk Address was just; but that, if not, it was another Gentleman's Observation, and 'tis humbly recommended to him to Defend it.

2. As to the Title, the Author refer'd it to the Society, to judge whether it might not as well signifie the Author was no Statesman, or that he was a News-writer too, as that he was a Great one; for News-writers are joy'd in the Title? — And our Objector being old Dog at Consequences, is desir'd to prove one here; if he can.

3. Whether Quotations are not as useful sometimes to remind People what has been said before, as to Collateral Proofs? And whether to have said the same thing again, tho' in other Words, had not more justly Expos'd the Author to a Charge of Tautology? And whether that is not a worse Folly, than Quoting himself?

Upon the whole Hearing, the Society remitted it to the Accuser, to say, Whether he is not fairly Answer'd, being unwilling to judge in their own Cause.

THE Society thought they had been eas'd of the Trouble of News-Writers, and began to hope the Gentlemen of that Fraternity had been sufficiently convinc'd, that they had Justice Justice done them —— When here comes a Chemical News-Monger; and truly, rather than the Town shall be surfeited with Lies, he is resolv'd to make an Extraction, and present us with the Spirit of all the News, and having bottel'd it up, tells us, 1. 'Tis an Elixir, and then a Marrow.

The Allegories were at once Voted inconsistent with one another; because Marrow cannot suffer, either Decoction, Fermentation, Distillation, or any other Operation, proper to make it an Elixir.

But that the Author may not be Tax'd with medling in any thing but Substantialls, he humbly desir'd it might be refer'd to the Querist in the former Story, to tell us, Whether the following News, in this New Account, be a Substantial, or not? Whether it be an Extraction, a Quintessence? And whether there be in it any Elixir, Marrow, or any thing Synonymous to the Title?

The Elixir: or the Marrow of Foreign News.

Paris, Decemb. 29.

" THIS Morning there past thro' this City " an Express from our Ambassador at " Madrid, in his way to Verſailles; but tho' the " Subject of his Message be kept secret, 'tis pre- " sum'd, that he has brought either good or bad " News of the Siege of Gibraltar.

The Society were Enclin'd to have spar'd this Gentleman, it being the very first Paper that has come out; but they thought it their Duty however to admonish him, that he keep to this wary way of Writing; and tho' he may be charg'd with Nonsense, he will never be charg'd with Lying; and they promise him to cry his Paper up for the truth that ever was writ.

The Post, it was presum'd, brought good News or bad —— Very likely! Truly ——

There was a Cat sat on a Well,

And when she fell in —— What then?

Why in she fell. The Matter of Fact is certainly true, deny it he that can; upon which the Society Voted, Whatever Captious: coope may Infer, the Paper is like to be very Ingenious, Candid, and Careful; and the like Cauſion was humbly recommended to the Bretbren of the General Intelligence, that all our News may be certainly true, and the Publick Papers may be fit to be depended upon.

THE following Question, is refer'd to the Author of the Courant, to give an Answer to.

Pray, Gentlemen, what more Exemplary Punishment can a Man suffer, after he has been dealt with as a Traitor? Vide Courant, 22 Decem.
